GENERAL ELECTRIC

Acquires Remington Company's Property, With Option to Purchase.

Company took over under lease, with the

At the outbreak of the war the Remington Arms U. M. C. Company had enormous war orders to execute, so they required additional factory space. No time was lost in making their plans, and they decided to carry out their big improvements in Bridgeport, Conn., their home for many years. Bridgeport had the advantage of good railroad connections, water front facilities and skilled labor. Adjoining the company's projects was a large unimproved tract. This erty was a large unimproved tract. This was acquired and on January 18, 1915, a contract was entered into for the con struction of the plant. During the fol-lowing eight months the entire plant of 1,500,000 square feet was completed, together with the power house. At the apex of activity in the Reming-ton plant there were 3,500 builders at work. At that time 100 cars of matewors. At that time 100 cars of material a day were brought upon the job.

It is hard to picture a plant of this size except by comparison. It is bigger than the Equitable Building by more than 200,000 square feet and 50 per cent. larger than the Woolworth Building. The plant is located on a tract of about forty acres. The actual space covered by buildings is about 900,000 square feet, or more than twenty acres. The floor area contained within the building is 1.555,257 square feet, or over thirty-six

In general scheme the buildings may be divided into several groups; First, buildings and the dry kiln; second, the five one story buildings; third, the power house, and fourth, the employment office and guard's quarters buildings and storage buildings. The first two groups are the manufacturing units SATURDAY, MARCH 29.

securing of this property by the General Flectric Company is a good indication of the industrial activity of the whole of the industrial activity of the company oper-country. Although the company oper-ates many of the largest manufacturing plants in this country, they did not have sufficient room to execute their orders Mails for South and Central Amerand needed about 1,000,000 to 1,500,000 square feet in order to turn out their products. Instead of buying land and building a plant along the lines of their own exacting requirements, they started an investigation of the so-called 'war plants' and the Remington Arms plant
